SCOPE OF WORK

REQUEST FOR QUOTATION # HQ861361

1. BACKGROUND

The mission of the Arizona Department of Health Services (ADHS) Office of Oral Health (OOH) is to promote oral health for the well-being of all Arizona residents. The United States Surgeon General's report in the year 2000 identified dental caries (tooth decay) as one of the most common childhood chronic diseases. Tooth decay is also one of the most common preventable diseases seen in children, preventable through preventive dental services such as the use of fluoride and the application of dental sealants.

Children who are at greatest risk for caries are those from low income and minority populations and are least likely to have access to dental care. The American Academy of Pediatric Dentistry and the American Dental Association recommends the first dental visit occur no later than 12 months of age. Children can get cavities as young as 12-18 months, which can cause pain and prevent them from being able to eat, speak, sleep and learn properly. Children do not lose all their baby teeth until they are about 12 to 13 years old. Of the decay found in children's teeth, approximately 90 percent occurs in tooth surfaces with pits and fissures, and almost two-thirds are found in the chewing surfaces alone. Dental caries can often be reversible or arrested in the earliest stages through a variety of proven preventive methods. Once the decay progresses and the longer the decay remains untreated, it becomes more difficult and costly to repair. As a result, early intervention and prevention is easier for both the child and the dental professional, less expensive, and more successful than treatment at a later time.

Health education and promotion can be an important piece of any public health initiative as many low income people do not understand the importance of seeking care or preventive services. The knowledge that dental caries is a transmissible disease caused by bacteria, or that simple behavior changes can limit the risk of decay, is not widespread among the general population let alone low income people. According to the National Institute of Dental and Craniofacial Research National Institutes of Health (NIDCR-NIH) fewer than one-quarter of U.S. adults know that dental sealants prevent dental decay. Collaborative efforts with agencies or groups such as Headstart centers, WIC centers or coalition groups can play a significant role in improving the education and awareness of community members.

National objectives help guide states in promoting health and wellness through such guidelines as the Healthy People 2010 oral health objectives. These objectives include:

- a. HP 21-1b: Reduce the proportion of children with dental caries experienced in their primary and permanent teeth to forty-two percent (42%)
- b. HP 21-2b: Reduce the proportion of children with untreated dental decay in primary and permanent teeth to twenty-one percent (21%)
- c. HP 21-8: Increase the proportion of 8-year-old and 14-year-old children who have received dental sealants on their molar teeth to fifty percent (50%)
- d. HP 21-12: Increase the proportion of low-income children and adolescents who received any preventive dental service during the past year to fifty-seven percent (57%)
- e. HP 21-13: (Developmental) Increase the proportion of school-based health centers with an oral health component
- f. HP 21-14: Increase the proportion of local health departments and community-based health centers, including community, migrant and homeless health centers, that have an oral health component to seventy-five percent (75%)

Prevention services provided through collaboration with the Arizona Department of Health Services, Office of Oral Health can help to address some, if not all of the above mentioned oral health objectives. Some of the services may include (but not be limited to) implementation of a dental sealant program, fluoride varnish program, or an early childhood oral health program.

The Arizona Dental Sealant Program (ADSP) is a school-based preventive dental program targeting schools with greater than 65% of the children participating in the free and reduced school meal program. Second and sixth grade children without private dental insurance are eligible to participate. Children must have parental consent and a clinical need for sealants. Screenings and sealants are provided by Office of Oral Health trained dentists, Affiliated Practice (AP) dental hygienists, dental hygienists, and dental assistants. OOH training ensures specified guidelines are used to ensure successful sealant retention. Additionally, every effort is made to ensure that participating children receive information and referral to establish a dental home near their community.

Pit and fissure sealants – plastic (resin) coatings applied to susceptible tooth surfaces – have been approved for use for many years and have been recommended by professional health associations and public health agencies. The purpose of sealants is to prevent the growth of bacteria present in the pits and grooves of molar teeth, which lead to the breakdown of tooth structure, resulting in decay. When properly placed, dental sealants are very effective in preventing caries on the chewing surfaces of first and second permanent molar teeth.

SCOPE OF WORK

REQUEST FOR QUOTATION # HQ861361

Fluoride varnish application on a child's teeth is a safe, cost-effective dental preventive method to prevent initial decay. It has shown to be one of the most effective ways to enhance remineralization, interfere with decay-causing bacterial build-up and reduce acid production on susceptible teeth. Once applied, it helps the tooth "remineralize" or restore surface enamel. Fluoride varnishes are applied directly to the tooth surface, providing for both immediate "remineralization" as well as on-going "time-released" fluoride protection. Fluoride varnish application works best if it is painted on the teeth 3 to 4 times a year. Applications 2 to 4 times a year have been shown to decrease caries in the permanent dentition by 38%. Fluoride varnish is an adjunct to community water fluoridation or dietary fluoride supplements. Children may also receive fluoride varnish application after sealant application as part of the school-based dental sealant program, consistent with Medicaid reimbursement policies, which may be subject to change.

Community health assessments are included in the core set of population-based elements outlined as essential in all communities by the Essential Public Health Services Work Group, (1994). Periodic dental surveys and data gatherings are conducted by the Office of Oral Health to determine the oral health status of Arizona's children and for reporting and monitoring Healthy People 2010 objectives. Numerous screeners are needed to participate in various surveys which follow strict calibration set on national standards. Such calibration training would be provided by the Office of Oral Health for each type of survey.

Both on a national and state level, the number of dental providers employed in public health settings are very low. Arizona's dentist-to-population ratio and dental hygienist-to-population ratio in rural areas are well below that of the national averages. Arizona has numerous HPSA's (Health Professional Shortage Areas) that are unable to find dentists for employment. One recent study found that 92% of dental practices in Arizona are in a private practice setting. The remaining 8% are in hospitals, non-profit settings, group settings, prisons, military settings, colleges, and in Indian Health Service settings and other federal agencies. One method to attract more dental providers to rural and public health settings is to provide educational opportunities for dental and dental hygiene students in public health programs, thus exposing the student to the needs of the community and instilling a desire to continue serving the community upon graduation.
